MOSCOW-Wrangel Island, which lies in the Arctic Ocean, north of the Chukhotsk Peninsula, which represents the northeastern tip of Siberia, has been the scene of an interesting experiment in polar colonization. Three years ago the Soviet Govern-little was heard of the colonists un-til the relief ship Litke, passing through Bering Straits and plow-ing through the heavy Arctic ice, reached Wrangel Island last summer, bringing foodstuffs and other neces-sities. A Soviet aviator visited the silies. A soviet water visited the siland in 1927 and brought back alarming reports of food shortage at that time. Since it was calculated that the supplies would last only three years there was some apprehension on board the Litke that the colo-nists might be found in a starving

Serious Flaw

A study of meteorological conditions revealed the first and most serious flaw in the location. The tract was alongside the river, and comparatively low for the vicinity, and observation revealed that it was subject to frequent mists and fogs. Naturally, this was a most serious drawback. Fogs are one of the few remaining hazards besetting aviation and one of the worst enemies of scheduled air transport service.

Examination was made of past records. These showed that fogs of one hour's duration which obscured objects 1000 feet away, had occurred over the area 29 days in the past 365. Furthermore, it was found that this Obstacles like telephone lines, or hills reduce the effective landing area of any prospective field by the

REDUCTION OF EFFECTIVE LANDING AREA BY OBSTACLES

These were the advantages and disadvantages of a specific landing field. Should the site be chosen in view of all the circumstances? The answer was, "No," and the city very wisely rejected this particular spot, and instead picked out another one for the development of a much safer and almost equally accessible air port.

Every Locality Is Individual The foregoing concrete illustra that tion is cited at length because it After deducting the ineffective area created by a hill on the western side and by several tall structures in the vicinity, there still remained an effective landing field of some 360 Here were some of the other handingers which was symmetrical enough.

> vidual bearing on the locality in question. A good procedure for towns or cities bent upon selecting an airport on it the location and boundaries of the most promising sites. The map should then be studied with a view to determining the direction of the city's growth and the present and future highroads and transportation systems radiating outward. With these factors clearly outlined, a study of meteorological conditions prevailing at these sites should be detailed, and then the individual sites studied from both the ground and the air.

Naturally, estimates should also be made of costs of acquisition and development. When complete data covering the several factors of suitability have been tabulated the next stage should be taken up. This consists of a critical appraisal of the comparative advantages of the sites, and can be best studied with the assistance of a rating schedule. Such a schedule should rate each site on the basis of weights assigned to the determining factors. When this is done a figure representing the cost per unit of suitability may be determined for each site. This is accomplished by dividing the total cost figure by the figure represent-ing the relative suitability. However, it must be emphasized that this is a matter for sound engineering and business judgment and that such mechanical aids as I have outlined cannot be used as a

"Great Oaks from Little Acorns Grow"

Today your business may be one of the little acorns.

Two things can build it into a mighty oak. The first essential is that you should produce a useful article or service for which a real need exists; the second is that you should use a skilled selling and advertising organisation to make it known.

The house of Cross-Courtenay has been built up on the success of its clients. Every firm making use of Cross-Courtenay advertising and Cross-Courtenay printing is a successful firm.

We can help to make your business just as successful. Our highly specialised experience enables us to find markets and to sell economically in those markets.

This book (published by Blackie & Son, Glasgow. 7s. 6d. net) is no ordinary cookery on the social habits of Scotland it will be strange if it has not also a circle of male readers, and there is no doubt that "The Scots Kitchen" is the work of a scholar. The book gathers together recipes from the Borders to the Shetland Isles. These have been levied from all types of kitchen, from Old Holy-rood Palace to island shieling. Many of the simple folk recipes collected in the Outer Islands have never before been published. In her historical sketch Miss McNeill shows how the pageant of Scottish history is shadowed in the kitchen. A chapter on Hospitality is a literary treat. The author is confident that out of the domestic travail through which women are passing there will emerge a new delight in the home, and not least in the kitchen. She points out that it was because the tradition of private hospitality was so strong that the development of the inn was long retarded in Scotland—to the dismay of the Words-worths, on their famous tour.

MINNIE LEONA UPTON.

A moonlight party on the shore of the Dead Sea! Fantastic dreams had never conjured up such an experience. No wonder their hearts marched the sunset: A wizard had played with the sky turning it into broad bands of red, orange, yellow and blue, a gorgeous back drop for the black towers and minarets of the city.

Before them lay a wild dump heap of rock, topsy-turvy slabs jutting through the thin yellow layer of earth. Far away across the Jordan mon pink and rose. The Dead Sea lay almost at their feet obscured by the rugged shoulders of the cliffs.

The understanding of the truth that our real selfhood is the expression of the omni-acting, all-knowing divine Mind, causes us to express a right sense of ability, to love to be active, and to rejoice in being so.

A troubled voice of dissent rose avoir beaucoup de crainte au sujet à cette norme, on se réjouit de la uneasily. Women covered their eyes. Hunrad lifted his head and muttered hoarsely, "Thor! take vengeance! Thor!"

Winfried beckoned to Gregor. "Bring the axes, thine and one for me. Now, young woodsman, show thy must fall, and swiftly, or all is lost!" The two men took their places Firmly they grasped the axe-helves and swung the shining blades. "Tree-god!" cried Winfried," art thou angry? Thus we smite thee!" "Tree-god!" answered Gregor, "art thou mighty? Thus we fight thee!" Clang! clang! the alternate strokes beat time upon the hard, ringing wood. The axe-heads glittered in oak. The huge trunk quivered. There was a shuddering in the branches.

.. Out of the stillness of the winter night, a mighty rushing noise sounded from the roots. Backward it fell, like a ruined tower, groaning and crashing as it split asunder in four great pieces.

Winfried let his axe drop, and bowed his head for a moment in the presence of almighty power. Then he turned to the people, "Here the timber," he cried, "already felled and split for your new building. On this spot shall rise a chapel to the true God." "And here," said he, as his eyes fell on a young fir-tree, standing straight and green with its top pointruins of the fallen oak, "here is the living tree . . . that shall be the sign of your new worship. See how it points to the sky. Call it the tree of the Christ child. Take it up and carry it to the chieftain's hall. You go no more into the shadows of the forest to keep your feast with ecret rites of shame. You shall keep them at home, with laughter and songs and rites of love. The thunderoak is fallen."-From "The Blue Flower," by HENRY VAN DYKE.

THERE are several concepts of tains the sense of freedom and abunwork. To some, work presents dance, and provides the right sense work at times seeming to them irk-some and at other times interesting.

Through the study of Christian Science one who has enjoyed his work nection with their activities. Some finds that he enjoys it even more, befear that they may not do their work cause he has learned not only that the source of right activity is right thinkeven lose their position on account of ing, but how, consistently, to think aright. Christian Science reveals the too hard and fear that they cannot exact standard of right thinking as the reflection of the divine Mind, God; and as thought conforms to this standard, one rejoices in increased effience and the demonstration of its ciency and in the ability to throw off the false beliefs that would limit his true activity.

He who accomplished the greatest work on earth said, "I can of mine own self do nothing," and, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." His understanding of spiritual man as the expression of the perfect Mind made Christ Jesus mighty, and it also made him humble. As we gain the true concept of activity as spiritual, we too may do our work in a wonderful way. But we need to keep always before us the fact that the Christ, Truth, enables us to do our work well; for pride would cause us to lose the ability to see activity as reflected, and thus to lose true efficiency

In most cases the teacher must set the ball rolling. Children will normally shy away from a book that smacks of school like colts from a bridle. But, given a start, compelling, amusing, mysterious, they will forge a way for themselves through a wilderness of difficulties. courage and glory and hope, as his own thoughts, part and parcel of his own mentality, expressed in actual words for him by the poet until the day when he may be able to express them himself.

The infinite variety of literature demands systematic and sympathetic choice of material by the teacher, infinite variety in methods of presentation and unwearying resource in a book! In another reading they mands systematic and sympathetic choice of material by the teacher. Infinite variety in methods of presentation and unwearying resource in getting the chosen passage "home" to the child. The measure of the teacher's success is the measure of the child's unconsciousness of having been taught—the measure of his faith that he himself has voyaged abroad on strange waters and has returned with treasure. Like Eli of old we must send our little Samuels back to their own communion with God, of Whom all beauty is.

The whole work of the teacher is to bring into one fellowship the young and ardent creatures under his charge and the wise and lofty masters who have enshrined for all time the best impulses, the tenderest emotions, the highest endeavors of men.

Then, as in all introductions, he stands aside and leaves the little company to each other. The most difficult, and also the most absorbing, part of the teacher's work lies in making a choice of material. Out of the great mass at his disposal he is to choose part. A well-nigh impossible task this unless he knows exactly what he wants, exactly what the children in his charge have need of, and has some definite plan in thought whereby to guide his selection. Every teacher works individually, of course, and every teacher worthy of the name knows the desire of his own heart, but certain broad lines may be useful as controls when setting out on the adventure of making a choice, building a syllabus. First, what can be rejected? What do we want, quite definitely, to spare our children until they are able to bear it and take no harm? A point must be noted here! It we find it uncongenial we do not plod joying exciting and swashbuckling yarns; every normal girl weep quite genuinely over related sorrow or hardship. It is a natural reaction to the appeal of adventure: the early stirrings of that capacity to "enter into the labors" of others. Wisely handled, it will culminate in true sympathy, strong and wise and constructive. Then, one's aim is not to repress this phase, but to guide the children through it as quickly and successfully as possible that their feet may be set on the firmer road ahead.

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR idea is that only the best is good

From modest beginnings this school has grown into a model institute acknowledged to be unequaled in Germany. The director, Herr Albert Greiner, recognizing the educational importance of music, the moral influ-ence of which, in his view, ranks immediately after religious teaching, has striven for years to establish thorough vocal music lessons for children from all classes of the population. In 1905 he finally obtained support for his plans from the town authorities of Augsburg. He then, with one assistant, began by teaching 100 children in two classes of 50 pupils each. In course of time the number of pupils increased to an annual average of 1700 and the instructing staff to 18 teachers.

Prices Fluctuate Within a Narrow Range-Selling in Moderate Volume

COPYRIGHT 1929, ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

NEW YORK—In listless trading the share market tone improved, and with nothing more to stimulate prices except a change from the selling to the buying side by professionals on the floor of the exchange, the market level was lifted in the late afternoon. Closing prices were 1 to 4 points higher in numerous active issues, but the last hour rally was not vigorous enough to restore all yesterday's losses.

So far as giving a clue to the future, the net result of the day's trading was nil; the feeling in the street was, nevertheless, more cheerful. Volume was less than 2,000,000 by the beginning of the last hour. Bonds were rather slow and irregularly lower.

The money market tone was mildly firm, with the call rate unchanged at the street days. COPYRIGHT 1929. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

The money market tone was mildly firm, with the call rate unchanged at 4½ per cent. Payment was made today on the treasury bill offer of $100,000,000, the proceeds of which were used to pay off that much of the special treasury certificates bought by the Reserve banks. Credit was also drawn out of the market by continued collection of income tax checks and the consequent reduction of the special treasury borrowing on that account. Rising holiday currency demand was a third factor making for firmer money.

Argenting Off Gold Basis

Argentina Off Gold Basis

Argentina Off Gold Basis

The most interesting development of the day occurred in South America. Alarmed at the steady gold drain during the year, and perhaps feeling somewhat panicky over the persistent oecline in the peso, the Argentine Government decided, in effect, to abandon for a time the gold standard.

In closing the Caja de Conversion, which is the gold exchange office of the country, Argentine is now off a gold basis. Private banks in that country may still ship gold, but there is not much available for export.

Since returning to gold in 1927, Argentina had drawn in about $154,000,000 in the metal, but the loss to date, this year, amounts to around $120,000,000, of which about $75,000,000 has come to New York. Of the total, however, only about $35,000,000 has come from the Caja de Conversion, so that action in closing the exchange office seems to have been at least prompt.

Argentina has been losing gold be-Argentina has been losing gold be-cause of a combination of unfavorable developments. Port strikes, poor crops, falling exports and rising imports have weakened the exchange position with respect to most foreign currencies. To-day the peso dropped abruptly and its decline upset other South American currencies.

In the European section rates were irregular with transactions moderate. Sterling fell below the gold point, but French francs were steady and Canadian dellar were strong dian dollars were strong.

Member Bank Loans Drop

Member Bank Loans Drop

Although brokers loans advanced $58,000,000 in the week of Dec. 11, the weekly report of the member banks in leading cities shows a decline of $71,000,000 in loans on securities and a drop of $92,000,000 in commercial loans.
Whatever may have been the case in October relative to the shifting of loans from brokers direct to bank customers, nothing of the sort has taken place in November and December.
After increasing $1,250,000,000 in October member bank loans to others

After increasing $1,250,000,000 in October member bank loans to others dropped more than $1,000,000,000 in November, and are continuing the decline this month. Quite possibly the liquidation of securities carried on loans secured direct from the member banks had much to do with the weakness of the market a week ago. These loans are still $568,000,000 higher than a year ago.

14 1 26½ 2½ 9½ ... 88 8 88 7 29 1½ ... 91½ ...

loans are still $568,000,000 higher than a year ago.

If the present process of selling for tax losses and buying for investment continues further declines in brokers' loans are to be expected. Numerous brokerage houses report that they are doing a fair business for clients in buying stocks for long-term investment. They report also a certain amount of tax selling, but the bulk of that is bound to have been done in November

ADAMS EXPRESS OMITS STOCK DIVIDEND ADAMS EXPRESS OMITS STOCK DIVIDEND
NEW YORK—Adams Express Company directors have taken no action on the stock dividend of 1 per cent which would be due at this time. On June 17 the board declared an initial semiannual stock dividend of 1 per cent. Adams recently increased the cash basis of the stock to $1.60 annually, the equivalent of $16 a share on the old stock, which was split 10-for-1 and which received the 1 per cent stock dividend. It is understood that in view of the fact that investment trusts have increased their shares so materially since last August. and that there is a temporary oversupply of such shares, Adams directors deemed it best to omit the stock dividends for a time.

LONDON—President William of the Board of Trade told diplomats of three South American countries that it was the immediate British task to regain the former trade position in South America, with all friendliness toward the United States, and to improve on it if possible. Britain had important positions in the markets of Argentina. Brazil and Uruguay before the war, but since then the United States had largely stepped into her shoes. OHIO SEAMLESS TUBE CO.'S BIG GAIN

Plant operations at the Ohio Seamless Tube Co., Shelby, in the first two weeks of December showed a 40 per cent increase over the rate of operations for November, President A. C. Morse announces. The increase in operations, according to Morse, is largely due to a revival in ordering by the automotive and oil industries, and also by machine and engine builders. MOSCOW, Ida.—In the Pacific Coast Conference the number of outstanding players for 1929 is smaller than it has been for a long time. The explanation is that teams have been better balanced than ever before, making it necessary for a player to be of almost "All-American" caliber to stand out.

all-Conference group. Although all terence is S. G. Dient 30 of Idano. The teams in the Conference, except the University of Idaho, were stronger than last, the Conference has only two "All-Americans" this year. Last year there was quite a spread between the abilities of the "All-Americans" and the rest of the stars brought out during the year's play. This year the spread in ability is less pronounced.

The 1928 All-Conference team contained the following players: Capt. I. G. Faillips '29, Canifornia, and F. D. Tappana '30, Southern California, endstand D. A. Robesky '29, both of Stanford, guards: N. R. Barrager '30, Southern California, center; D. E. Williams '29, Southern California, and L. B. Thomas '29, Southern California, and L.

As usual most of the honored players are seniors. Nine of the eleven have played their last Conference football. One is a junior and the other a sophomore, being one of the exceptions when a first-year varsity man is selected for an All-Star group.

Final selection of the honor eleven from the 30 outstanding stars creates a group representing seven of the 10 Conference members. Last year's team came from six colleges. Northern division teams place more members on the All-Star group this year than last. California places three men on the All-Star team, Southern California and Stanford two men each, while Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Washinzer teams the star of the content of the star of the service of the ground in the content of the service of the ground in C. Proposal to Divide Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association Fails

MOBILE, Ala. (P)—The pre-convention proposal to divide the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association Intercollegiate Athletic Association into two or more groups failed to come before the delegates at the opening session of the S. I. A. A. here Monday. No mention of the variously rumored proposals was made as the delegates held a discussion of alleged subsidizing of athletes and professionalism within the association.

Dr. J. W. Provine, of Mississippi College, Clinton, Miss., president of the S. I. A. A., in his annual message, urged the adoption of a recommendation by the executive committee, tion by the executive committee, authorizing the president to appoint a commission to investigate the allegate subsidizing of athletes by member colsubsidizing of athletes by member colleges.

After a round table discusion, the association referred the recommendation back to the executive committee, asking that it be expressed in more definite and detailed terms and presented again at a later session. Dr. Provine told the association that the commission would be merely a fact finding body and the information it received would be turned over to the executive committee. The findings will not be made public.

not be made public.
"The fludings of the commission will be a family affair," he said. "We do not want a public linen washing."
Dr. Provine told the delegates that the condition of athletics within the S. I.
A. A. is as a whole good. However, he said that some schools were harming themselves by allowing public opinion to dictate their athletic policies.

The association referred the application for membership entered by cation for membership entered by Loyola University, of New Orleans, to Loyola University, of New Orleans, to a committee for examination. It will be presented to the association later.

The association accepted the resignations offered by Oglethorpe University, of Atlanta, and Furman University of Greenville, S. C.

The association also passed a resolution expressing approval of the effort on the part of the Carnegie Foundation to bring to light "various abuses and bad practices in college athletics, with the view of correcting them and raising the standards of college athletics."

FORWARD PASSING LIMITED SOMEWHAT

Attacking Player Cannot Enter Ahead of the Play

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BURBAU CHICAGO—Forward passing was limited somewhat by a ruling adopted by the National Hockey League Board of Governors, who met here Monday. They added a sentence to the forward-pass rule, thereby providing that no attacking player can enter the offensive zone ahead of the play. This does not affect passing within the zones, but not affect passing within the zones, but does affect passing across a blue line. does affect passing across a blue line. Saturday's games will see the first enforcement of the new regulation. It was contended by some that the present forward passing rule has resulted in a milling knot of players in front of the net, which is more like lacrosse than hockey. Thomas Shaughnessy, manager of the Chicago Black Hawks, had no objection to the rule, but protested against its being made in midseason. It should have been made before the race started, he claims.

Canadian grain in bond is increasing so rapidly that it forecasts a grow-ing importance for New York as a grain-exporting port.

Much of the domestic grain finds its way to tidewater by way of the lakes and river, to Montreal, and this has brought down the figures on domestic resulting in a reduction of 18,000,000 bushels, or 40 per cent, in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, as compared with the previous year. During the same period, there was a gain of 19,000,000 bushels through Gulf ports and 4,000,000 bushels of United States grain through Montreal.

Canadian Grain Singularly enough, as American The largest Italian vessel ever grain tends to move through Monbuilt will bear the name of Gugli- treal, Canadian grain grows in volton vessel developing a speed of 27 dian export movement through New knots. The ship has been ordered by the Navagazione Generale Italiana bushels in 1913 to 73,000,000 bushels and the orders follows closely upon in 1928. This may be ascribed, to at an order for a vessel of approxileast some extent, to the later move-

Long Piers Constant agitation for longer piers in New York is indicative of the need will be two days under the present for provision for the new vessels soon to make their appearance in the transatlantic ship lanes. With 1000foot ships, the piers should be 1100 to 1200 feet long, as a vessel obviously cannot put her stem at the very head of the slip and anything shorter than 1000-feet piers means either that the stern will protrude into the T 9:30 on Monday, through the stream or that uncovered extensions WEAF network, George Ceha-mosky, baritone of the Metro-from 14th to 23rd Streets, to protect politan Opera Company, was pre-the long ships. Who: ANTON PAVLOVICH CHE-KHOV

Where: Russia.

When: Nineteenth to twentieth cen-

Why famous: A Russian dramatist and novelist. He came of humble people, his grandfather having been a serf, his father a tradesman. The young Chekhov attended the gymnasium in his native village, then went to Moscow University, where he took his degree in medicine. He practiced but little, however, for even while he was a medical student he had begun to write. At first he wrote for comic papers and in 1886 some of these tales first appeared in book of those tales first appeared in book form. During the next year was produced his first play.

During the 1890's Chekhov was living with his parents on a small esand district, apply to Brackett & Sons, Anctioners, Surveyors, House and Estate Agents, 27

Naval Parity—Key and Menace to Success at London

THERE was, unquestionably, complete justification for the introduction of the word parity in the naval discussions between Great Britain and the United States; for not only historical considerations, but undoubted developments of recent years, together with the vexed problems of the right of search and the freedom of the seas, make the recognition of naval parity of special significance, of symbolic import. Yet without entering too deeply into matters on which there is now general agreement, it may properly be said that parity, even as between the United States and Great Britain, useful as it is in its symbolic import, is not to be taken too literally. It is a quality to be recognized, but, in working out the precise number of ships and tonnage on both sides, attention must be paid to practical needs; and as these needs cannot possibly correspond in detail, there must be an elastic system of compensation.

When we turn to the European situation we find the repetition of the demand for parity—as between France and Italy-somewhat meaningless and possibly mischievous. There was sufficient similarity between Great Britain and the United States to permit the expression; but as between France and Italy the basis of an accord must be (as, in the ultimate sense, it is in respect of the two leading naval powers) the acceptance by each other of respective national needs. To illustrate this point, imagine an obvious absurdity. Suppose Portugal suddenly asserted that, in strict justice, it is entitled to stand on a naval equality with Britain. This claim could be satisfied only by the building of perfectly useless vessels, and the result would be an increase instead of a decrease of naval armaments.

France and Italy, in many respects, it is true, stand on a par. The question is whether they have the same naval needs. If they have not, then to enter into negotiations with the preliminary stipulation that parity is a sine qua non is to risk the complete falsification of the conference, and perhaps to invite its failure. The French, rightly or wrongly, argue that they, possessing a vast colonial empire, second in importance only to the British Commonwealth, require more ships than Italy, which has little more than Mediterranean interests to defend. Is this argument, and the facts on which it is founded, sound? It is not for us to answer at this juncture; but it is necessary for all to realize that an answer is not found in proclaiming that, whatever may be the relative needs of France and Italy, a priori there must be parity. If Italy can show as good a case as France, well and good. If not, the demand for parity, regardless of needs, is purely a manifestation of national ambition and not to be commended.

For either one country is to receive fewer ships than it needs—an extremely unlikely eventuality-or the other is to receive more ships than it needs-and that way danger lies. Parity for the sake of parity, in defiance of the facts, postulates a perilous rivalry. It suggests not the establishment of peaceful relations, but the hypothesis of potential antagonism. It would be highly unfortunate if the sentiment of naval rivalry were crystallized in the London conference. That is why even such expedients as a Mediterranean Locarno, which would place England in the rôle of arbiter between hostile forces, are scarcely to be encouraged, except as a last resort.

The correct method is to ascertain the needs of the two countries and to forget their ambitions. If it should happen that parity represents their approximate needs, then it may be accepted with alacrity. But if it represents nationalistic ambitions, then parity is an undesirable objective. In any event, parity for parity's sake cannot furnish a good solution.

Congress, Business and the Future

VEN its best friends will have to admit that the United States Senate actually outdid itself in the promptness and facility with which it enacted the tax reduction bill. Rarely has any financial measure been approved with such dispatch, and this speedy and favorable action on the part of Congress is a tribute at once to the soundness of the Administration's proposal and to the judgment of the congressional leaders. The effect of the reduction will be to decrease the tax on most classes of personal and corporation incomes by 1 per cent, effecting a savings of approximately $160,000,-000 to the people.

As one step in President Hoover's many-sided program for the stabilizing of American prosperity, the forthcoming tax reduction is a valuable contribution. The reduction had been contemplated long before the recent crisis in the stock market, and the fact that it is now being carried into practice despite the temporary financial panic is the most constructive kind of evidence that the Nation's industry is basically

There are sound reasons for facing the business future with confidence. The spontaneous and intelligent co-operation with which representatives of labor, industry, and finance join with the President in inaugurating voluntary measures for forestalling a depression which the stock collapse might have induced is already demonstrating its results. And while the tax reduction will facilitate these results, Mr. Hoover is as aware as everyone else that one does not legislate prosperity. Legislation is important, but only as a means toward freeing individual initiative and co-ordinating individual activity. Even as the President closed his address to the recent business conference in Washington, we can think of no better thought at the moment than is embodied in that good oldfashioned word "work." It still has its virtues.

Open Doors to Prison Reform

"THE brief blaze of a few prison riots won't do it; it will take a real conflagration, a successful revolt that will turn several thousand convicts loose on the country. Then the American people may do something about the prisons." It was a somewhat cynical observer of public affairs who put forward this view of what is required to quicken the laggard steps of prison reform. We refuse to accept his recipe. Such drastic experiences are not necessary, but full use of happier methods is needed if public attention is to be kept focused on the prisons until opinion crystallizes behind adequate reforms.

Probably the first requisite for dealing rightly with the whole question is for citizens to examine and clarify their own attitude. Why do we incarcerate men? Is it to avenge ourselves on them? Or to protect ourselves from them? Or to rehabilitate them? He is an unusual citizen who has analyzed his own motives and knows which of these three purposes he wishes to attain by the imprisonment of his erring neighbor.

Vengeance, we believe, is out of date. Society may inflict it unknowingly through neglect of prisoners, but seldom is it the motive of punishment. Most people today would say they desire only to be protected from criminals; many would declare that correction should be a major aim in any system of imprisonment. Some have recognized that correction is the surest protection. Locking a man up for ten years-no matter how securely-affords no protection from him in the eleventh year. Indeed, under present conditions it often makes him more dangerous in the eleventh year.

Penologists are not agreed, and former prisoners differ, as to the efficacy of severity as a deterrent. Some say that it merely makes men desperate; others that it teaches them crime does not pay. What all do agree upon is that certainty and celerity of punishment are effectual. It is difficult to believe that the prisons have been made too pleasant; clearly, they should be kept rigorous enough to remove any desire to frequent them. Everyone concedes that their effect should in all cases be such as to help convince the criminal that crime cannot win.

There are other things upon which there is general agreement. One is that American prisons are intolerably overcrowded. Sanford Bates, Superintendent of Federal Prisons, said only a few days ago that the penitentiary at Atlanta could comfortably house 1452 inmates; it has more than double that number. Leavenworth, with a normal capacity of 1560, is housing 3723. Many state institutions are equally crowded. A recent investigation showed that twenty-two of the largest prisons in the country have an average population 53 per cent above their normal capacity. This condition is bad enough in itself, but worse in the obstacle it offers to such obvious reforms as segregation.

Another admitted need is fuller employment of prisoners. To quote Mr. Bates:

Recent scientific studies have demonstrated that the greatest factor making for successful reform is an ability and willingness on the part of the subject to do a day's work. But one industry has been authorized by Congress at the Atlanta penitentiary, and this gives employment to but 800 out of the total 3777. Two industries have been authorized at Leavenworth, leaving probably from 1500 to 2000 men in either complete or semi-idleness at this

A really effective probation and parole system is another conceded necessity. Today there is seldom any adequate check upon a paroled prisoner. His own periodic report or that of an irresponsible friend is often the only information the authorities obtain, and sometimes even that is lacking.

Adequate housing, segregation, fuller employment, effective probation—these are available reforms of acknowledged merit. Others may prove useful eventually; these should be employed immediately. Is there any good reason public opinion should not be mobilized to that

Education: Too Long and Too Short

R. RAY LYMAN WILBUR, United States Secretary of the Interior, speaking before the Interfraternity Conference in New York, has predicted that the four-year college course, leading to a bachelor's degree, is on its way to oblivion. His expectation rests on two tendencies in contemporary educational discussion. There is, on the one hand, a widespread inclination to question the worth of the present four-year college course for many who are now pursuing it. And, on the other hand, the development of graduate schools and faculties shows that the need of postgraduate instruction is being felt by larger numbers of students than at any time in the past.

For the first of these conditions the swollen registrations of the colleges in the years since the war are largely responsible. With the increasing economic resources of American families, college attendance has become almost as much a matter of course as high school attendance was a generation ago. As a result American colleges are crowded with an army of young people, only a small percentage of whom desire to obtain more than such general cultural advantages as will fit them socially for an ordinary business career. Educators are increasingly coming to believe that the student can receive this general cultural preparation as satisfactorily in much less than four years of campus life. With the perfection of so-called orientation courses, by which the main contents and conclusions in most fields are made available for the college student who does not desire to specialize, it is quite possible indeed to make the student aware of the general geography of today's cultural world, as well as to teach him how to discover and use the tools for self-instruction in a two-year period. The resultant educational product is a man or woman who, while not an expert in any field, is quite able to move with ease in almost any company.

But for the student who wishes to acquire something approaching mastery in any field of intellectual inquiry, four years has proved as much too short a period as it seems too long for the man with only general interests. The result is the increase in the number of postgraduate students, and the tendency of universities to concentrate their most distinguished faculty members in the graduate courses. It is there, the school apparently believes, that the serious study takes place. Yet when this postgraduate study, especially along professional lines, cannot be undertaken until the student has spent four years in the ordinary bachelor's degree course, it exacts a toll of time which neither the student nor the community can well afford.

What is to be the outcome? Dr. Wilbur believes that many colleges will come to confine their efforts to providing a brief general cultural introduction to the world which can be obtained within the limits of a two-year course, while others will take on the aspects of universities offering courses of six years, and longer, to fit for professional leadership of the most exacting

Why We Fought Spain

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: In the editorial, "The Haitian Inquiry," in the issue of the Monitor of December 10, appears this

The United States declared war upon Spain because it disapproved of the form of government in Cuba.

Evidently the one writing this editorial did not mean what he said. To make such a statement and leave the subject there seems to be far from the facts. The Monitor stands for truth, and doubtless will be glad to have this sentence pointed out. Perhaps others have already done so. M. A. H.

Governments are seldom frank as, to the reasons for a declaration of war. For example, the United States, in entering upon the recent World War, never technically declared war at all, but by resolution of Congress proclaimed that a state of war actually existed, basing this assertion upon the German submarine attacks upon United States ships. Doubtless the declaration of war upon Spain was produced by various influences—the intrigues of the Cuban junta, the clamor of American yellow journalism, and above all the destruction of the Maine. Technically and historically, however, the fact is as stated in the editorial in the Monitor. On April 20, 1898, concurrent resolutions of the House and Senate declared, among other things:

. for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relin-quish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Accordingly, on April 25 the President asked Congress for a joint resolution declaring a state of war between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain, and citing the resolution above quoted as the reason therefor. Disapproval of the government of the Cubans by Spain, and determination to end that form of government, were historically, therefore, the reasons for the declaration of war by the United

Improve the Cape Cod Canal

THE appeal of New England business representatives to President Hoover for an early survey of the Cape Cod Canal, with a view to its improvement by act of Congress, is one that the President undoubtedly will respond to favorably if he finds the law permits. The assertion is made that under the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1909 such a survey would be legal if effected by Executive order, and of course if it were promptly completed it would expedite the carrying out of any appropriations that Congress might make for the later improvement of the canal.

It may be doubted whether any artificial waterway, for the improvement of which measures are now pending, promises a greater reward for expenditures made upon it than does the Cape Cod cut. Even now, though in a condition which to the most casual observer seems to be menacing, the canal is carrying a very considerable traffic. The lines now using it say that if it were deepened and widened they would put on larger steamers, and beyond a question an immense mass of ocean traffic that now goes around the Cape would use the canal route if it were free from the dangers and delays entailed by its present condition.

Moreover, with a suitable landing place at some point convenient to land transportation, there is no doubt that the passenger service from both New York and Boston for residents of the Cape would be greatly developed. We doubt whether there is any link in the coastal waterways between Maine and Texas which will so fully repay expenditures for its improvement as will this New England institution.

Editorial Notes

There's an old saying among many who are obliged to work on Christmas Day that "it may be Christmas for some, but for me it's just December 25." For the crew and passengers of the around-the-world liner President Polk, however, it will not even be that. Their ship will reach the one hundred and eightieth meridian on December 24, and the day following will be December 26.

Harvard College and its engineering school have recently awarded 455 scholarships totaling $155,020, which gives some idea of what one of the larger American colleges is doing toward helping the young man who really wants to learn but has not the necessary money.

What to do with old number plates does not become a problem in the Philippine Islands this year, motorists simply affixing two small numerals "30" on their present tags, which will be retained for three years.

"Wonder what Commander Byrd will do, now that there are no more poles to fly over?" asks the Des Moines Register. Why, he will just keep on flying, of course, like other birds.

One Night in Pago Pago

ONYA and I stood just beneath the bridge as the captain brought us very slowly, very gently, through the narrow entrance to the justly famous harbor of Pago Pago, southernmost island outpost of the United States. Pago Pago (pronounced "Pango") is the name of the little town where the naval station is situated. The name of the island is Tutuila, and it is the chief of the group which constitute American Samoa, in the south Pacific Ocean. These islands are America's only possessions in the Southern Hemisphere.

The name of the island, Tutuila, was familiar. I remember having learned at school that it was an American possession. But of the beauty of the island, and of the harbor of Pago Pago in particular, I knew nothing until last evening, when, delayed at sea and prevented from making port, as expected, in the afternoon, we cautiously nosed our way into the narrow passage through the reef by the light of an enormous full moon-a tropical moon, whose brilliance permeated all the atmosphere and wrapped us in a silver transparency.

"This is romance," sighed Sonya. And I agreed.
Pago's exquisite little harbor lies in the crater of an extinct volcano. Imagine a giant cup with a triangular chip out of one side and filled to capacity with water, and you have a good idea of the general plan of this fine haven in the South Seas. Steep mountains, festooned with clumpy tropical verdure, rise sheer from the water's edge on all sides, except where the break to seaward provides a narrow and rather circuitous entrance.

Along the devious channel we feel our way. Lights flash er glow ahead and on either hand to guide us. Like a wall in front of us towers the Rainmaker, a rugged peak against which low-hanging clouds are driven, and spend themselves in showers. The South Sea perfume is heavy in the air, that indefinable fragrance compact of flowers trees, shrubs and copra (dried coconut meat), staple product of the islands.

A turn in the channel, and our entrance is no longer visible. We might be in a small lake, for the sea has disappeared, and not a ripple disturbs the surface of the water, except where our slowly moving prow cuts a shallow furrow. Over there in a shadow near the bank someone is idly paddling a canoe, and the drip of the water from the paddle can be distinctly heard. Oh, peaceful little Pago Pago, you may be a naval station, but you breathe peace, not war!

At the water's edge, perhaps a hundred yards from us, are little bungalows. They have screened verandas, which are softly lighted. White uniforms and filmy frocks move here and there in the light, and snatches of laughing conversation float across the water. One by one, doors are opened, people come down veranda steps, and in gayly chatting groups make their way to the common center of interest, the dock where we are to be made fast. For our coming is an event! Steamer day in Pago Pago is a great

We send a line ashore and are gradually warped into position. All Pago is waiting for us-naval officers, their wives and families, a few enlisted men in "whites," and swarms of native Samoans, the women wearing nightgownlike cotton dresses, the men with or without white cotton singlets, and wearing the tightly wrapped skirt secured broad belt or girdle.

All the Samoans are barefoot; their feet are broad and muscular, developed as feet can be which know not the constant confinement of boots and shoes. Patroling the dock are several members of the defense force recruited from among the natives of the island. Great dignity is theirs. They wear a brimless red hat, white singlet, and skirt cloth of navy blue bordered with red. They are picked men, and membership in their force is a mark of distinction. Not a boy in the island but would give his all to wear their uniform!

Sonya was gazing pensively at the groups of Samoan women on the dock. "Oh," she sighed disappointedly, "they're not wearing grass skirts." And in her sigh was discouragement resulting from an unsuccessful quest which commenced a year ago. We had, so to speak, scoured the South Seas with a grass skirt as a major objective, and had been thwarted in every port.

In Tahiti, the first island which we visited, we were so overwhelmed by the novelty of our experience that we actually forgot to buy a grass skirt. At Raratonga, we were not permitted to go ashore. In Fiji, we were s hospitably entertained by sailed without making the desired addition to our wardrobe. And here we were in Samoa, the last stronghold of the hula skirt in its native habitat (for Honolulu is so civilized, and grass skirts seem so artificial there), and we had not yet obtained this object of thousands of miles of travel!

"Never mind," said I to Sonya. "We'll get one yet!" But there must have been a lack of confidence in my voice, for Sonya seemed unconvinced.

We were received on the dock by a naval officer and his wife to whom we had a letter of introduction. They led us, with several of our friends from aboard the ship, along a beautiful, palm-bordered avenue beside the bay, to their charming bungalow. Here we sat on the veranda, and chatted about the island, and about our voyage.

As we sat there, the rain-making proclivities of the peaks about us were fully demonstrated in successive heavy showers. We could hear these downpours coming considerable distance, and as each advanced, its at a muffled staccato became louder and louder, until the roof over our heads resounded to its pelting. After a few minutes of torrential rain, all was quiet, and the moon shone brightly until obscured by the cloud conveying the next shower.

During the hour that we spent on the veranda, no less than four rain clouds emptied themselves over our heads. Residents of Pago learn to take these showers as a matter of course, and refer to them as "liquid sunshine." Having experienced them only after dark, I can say that "molten moonlight" seems to describe them equally well.

As we chatted with our friends, I noticed that Sonya's attention was not always focused upon the topic of conversation. She cast fitful glances into the moist darkness surrounding the bungalow, as if anxious to be up and doing something. I knew that she was thinking of the grass skirt, and eager to be off on our quest. The extent of her distraction may be judged by this, that her attention wandered even when the conversation took its inevitable turn to the servant problem.

It appears that, in Pago, native Samoans not infreoffer their services free, or for very small wages. They feel that they are sufficiently rewarded by being permitted the honor of being employed in an officer's household. Money means very little to them, for their daily needs are easily satisfied, and there is little that money can be spent for. Even the revelation that there still exists a place on earth so truly Arcadian failed to grip Sonya's imagination. For her, there could be no true Arcadia without a grass skirt.

Soon the hour arrived when we must take our leave. Our host and hostess decided to return with us to the ship, and proposed that we might, on the way, stop at the market to do any necessary shopping. Sonya was delighted with this idea. "But will the market be open so late at night?" she asked. "The market is always open on steamer day as long as the ship is in port," said our hostess, reassuringly.

We walked along the avenue until we came to a low, white building with a colonnade along its front and spacious gardens between it and the road. Seated on the grass beside the garden paths, and squatting on the floor of the colonnade, were several hundred Samoans, both men and women, surrounded by their wares. Some had lanterns on the ground beside them, the better to display their merchandise. Most of the men had articles of carved wood to sell: many-legged round bowls inlaid with shell, war clubs, and models of out-rigger canoes.

1 1 1 The women specialize in tapa cloths, made by a laborious process of beating out the fiber of mulberry bark, and stained in geometric patterns of brown, black, red or blue. They also have for sale strings of beads made from seeds and shells, reed baskets of many different shapes and colors, and-grass skirts in profusion. There is a skirt for every taste: plain ones, colored ones, striped ones, and some with broad girdles on which the word

"Samoa" stands out in glaring capitals.

The Samoans remain seated in their places, and wait for us to inspect their wares. We point to some article and ask, "How much?" Invariably the answer is the same. One finger is raised and the single word, "dollar," is pronounced. We are almost convinced that this one word comprises the Samoan's complete English vocabulary, until further search brings to light several who respond to our questioning with "Feefety cents," or, on rare occasions, "Seventee-five cents." We buy a few tapa cloths and a wooden bowl. The ladies "shop" diligently for the finest "hula" skirts. We men drift back to the ship, leaving our wives to enjoy the delights of the South Sea equivalent of John Wanamaker's. We are to sail at midnight, but 12 o'clock comes and there is no sign of Sonya and her companions. It is pouring rain. Fortunately, our cargo is not yet all loaded. We are talking of sending out a party to rescue the ladies from their buying instincts, when we see three familiar figures running down the avenue toward the ship. Yet there is something odd about their appearance. Over their heads are what appear to be clusters of waving plumes, and around their shoulders are ragged capes.

4 4 4 They dash through the sheds beside the dock and come running up the gangplank just as preparations are being made to haul it ashore. In the bright lights of the deck, the strangeness of their appearance is explained. Each has over her head a skirt of grass, to serve as an umbrella. Each has around her shoulders a skirt of grass, serving as a rain cape. And Sonya has, in addition, a skirt of grass tied round her waist. "Wasn't it a clever thought?" I hear Sonya asking, as each of the others takes the grass skirts from her head and shoulders and hands them over to Sonya.

"They're all mine!" shouts Sonya to me, triumphantly, as I stride along the deck, prepared to deliver a lecture upon the importance of being aboard ships at the hour of sailing. "I let the girls use them to keep the rain

From the World's Great Capitals—Paris

A LREADY the vendors of chestnuts have appeared at the street corners of Paris with their smoking braziers full of plump fruit, which is a sure sign that autumn is fast fading into winter in the opinion of Paris. If, as some expect, the winter is again severe, braziers not only full of steaming chestnuts, but of burning coke, will be seen again in the streets. Several of these were indeed seen recently on the race course at Auteuil for the spectators to warm their hands at.

It is strange how little interest the Parisians appear to take in a political crisis. In circumstances similar to that of the overthrow of the Briand Government there would have been crowds waiting outside the House of Commons in London to watch the leaders of parties coming and going, and the newspapers would have been eagerly snatched from the hands of the newsboys in the streets There was no crowd outside the Chambre des Députés while the recent crisis lasted; the various groups met to decide whether they should collaborate or not in the formation of a government, without any sign of popular excitement. Newspapers were not eagerly bought to see how M. Daladier was faring, or whether M. Clementel would succeed, or M. Tardieu would form a government Neither in the cafés nor on the boulevards did one hear any animated conversations about the political events of the day. Parisians simply shrugged their shoulders when one mentioned the subject to them; they were not concerned at not having a government for twelve days. They professed frank indifference to the movements of the political chessboard, characterizing them all as a game, inspired by the desire of one politician to outdo another.

Eight years ago a benefactor of the University of Paris, Emile Deutsch de la Meurthe, offered to it a sum of 10,000,000 francs to make better provision for the lodging of students. The French Government took advantage of this generous gift by placing twenty-eight hectares of land recovered from the fortification zone at the disposal of the city of Paris. Subsequently a foundation was formed to collect the necessary money to erect the new buildings of the university, and the ground has been gradually enlarged so that a park of something like forty hectares will eventually be available. But the necessary money for the enterprise could hardly have been found if it had not been for the generosity of John'D. Rockefeller Jr., who promised $2,000,000 toward the building of the various halls which will be needed. He finally added an additional sum for the new "City of the University," which is to be paid by installments at the rate of $60,000, $55,000, and $50,000 for three years respectively.

Mr. Rockefeller then invited MM. Honorat and Branet, and the architect, M. Bechmann, to visit him in America, in order to study the organization of American universities and especially that of the "International House" at New York. A plan of the new buildings was next drawn up, and when these buildings are finished they will provide Paris with an exceptionally fine "Cité Universitaire. Twelve of the buildings are in process of construction on frontage which will extend for about a kilometer facing the Boulevard Jourdan. At the back are extensive playing fields for football and baseball and general athletics.

The idea is to build houses for lodging students of various nationalities. Thus there are to be "Pavillons" for the United States, Canada, Argentina and Cuba, for Great Britain, Holland, and Spain, Japan, Armenia, Indo-China, Denmark and even tiny Monaco. Some of the finest buildings are for the French students from the provinces and colonies, and altogether this University City will have 1000 rooms available for French students, who number 7000 out of 27,000 at the University of Paris, and 1491 rooms for foreign students who number about 7000. Greece, Norway, Poland, Switzerland and Czechoslovakia are anxious to have quarters provided for their students also, so that the University City will in time include students from most of the civilized countries in the world. This experiment is a far more practical and useful one than the plan of building an International City around the new Palace of the Nations at Geneva.

Walter Bagehot, the English banker who wrote a lively account of French politics in the early fifties of the last century, declared that the Parisians showed such a keen excitement in all that went on, that it proved that the French had no ability at parliamentary government, since they had no capacity for compromise. He deplored the lack of their capacity to co-operate since, if there were to be parliaments and parties, there must be give and take between men of different views to enable a government to be carried on. Bagot would have noticed the same tendency to split into groups, had he been present today in France. But he would no longer be able to say that the Republic was in any danger owing to the acute bitterness of political divisions of opinion.
